George Milton: The Pragmatist with a Dream

George Milton, the sharp-witted but weary protector of Lennie, carries the weight of their shared aspirations. His words often reveal his underlying tenderness, his frustration, and his desperate hope for a better future.

1. "'With us it ain't like that. We got somebody to talk to that gives a damn about us.'" (Chapter 1, Page 14)

This early quote sets the stage for the central theme of companionship in a world rife with isolation.

George's emphasis on their unique bond with Lennie highlights the importance of connection, a stark contrast to the solitary lives of most ranch hands. It's a foundational statement about their shared dream and the emotional sustenance they derive from each other.

1. "'An' live off the fatta the lan'.'" (Chapter 1, Page 15)

This oft-repeated phrase encapsulates their idealized vision of owning their own piece of land. It's more than just financial security; it's about autonomy, dignity, and escaping the endless cycle of migrant labor. The "fatta the lan'" represents a tangible symbol of their aspirations and the promise of a life free from the control of others.

1. "'But not us! Not George and Lennie! We gonna have a little house, an' a bunch of rabbits, an' we're gonna have a garden so we can go out and I like canned peaches.'" (Chapter 1, Page 14)

This expanded version of their dream, often spoken with a wistful tone, paints a vivid picture of domesticity and simple pleasures. The mention of canned peaches, a small but specific detail, grounds the dream in a relatable reality, showcasing George's yearning for ordinary comforts.

1. "'I think I knowed from the very first day. I think I knowned we'd never do it. He still got that baby rabbit and I think I knowed we never would reach that end, anyway.'" (Chapter 6, Page 94)

This is arguably one of the most tragic and revealing quotes in the novella. Spoken just before the devastating climax, it reveals George's profound understanding of their insurmountable circumstances and Lennie's inherent inability to control his own strength. It's a moment of crushing realization, tinged with a sorrowful acceptance of fate.

Lennie Small: Innocence and Unconscious Strength

Lennie, with his immense physical strength and childlike intellect, is the embodiment of innocence and vulnerability. His words, often simple and repetitive, carry a profound weight, revealing his dependence on George and his innocent desires.

1. "Tell me about the rabbits, George. Tell me.'" (Chapter 1, Page 13)

This recurring request is Lennie's mantra, a soothing balm that he uses to calm himself and to envision their future. The rabbits represent the tangible symbol of their dream, a source of comfort and a reminder of what they are working towards. For Lennie, it's a world of gentle petting and simple happiness.

1. "I like to pet nice things. Nice, soft things."
(Chapter 1, Page 13)

This seemingly innocuous statement belies Lennie's tragic flaw. His love for soft things, particularly rabbits, leads to unintended destruction due to his immense strength. It's a poignant foreshadowing of the dangers his touch poses.

1. "I didn't wanna hurt him. George, I didn't wanna hurt him.'" (Chapter 5, Page 91)

This desperate plea, uttered after Lennie accidentally kills Curley's wife, is heartbreaking. It underscores his lack of malicious intent and his utter confusion and fear at his own actions. It highlights the tragic disconnect between his gentle desires and his destructive power.

Candy: The Voice of Experience and Despair

Candy, the aging swamper with a missing hand, represents the plight of the elderly and disabled in a harsh society. His dog's death and his subsequent plea to join George and Lennie's dream reveal a deep-seated fear of abandonment and a desperate longing for belonging.

1. "“You ain’t got no right to shoot no dog, Candy.””
(Chapter 3, Page 61)

This quote, spoken by Slim, reflects the moral compass of the ranch hands, but also hints at the harsh utilitarianism of their world. The act of shooting Candy's old dog, which is suffering and of no use, is a practical decision that deeply wounds Candy, emphasizing his own feelings of obsolescence.

1. "“When they end up doin’ that, I won’t have no place to go.”” (Chapter 3, Page 59)

This chilling realization, after hearing about Lennie's trouble with Curley, exposes Candy's profound fear of being discarded once he is no longer useful. He understands the fate that awaits him, mirroring the fate of his dog, and this fear drives his desperation to join George and Lennie's dream.

1. "“You told me, George. You told me an’ I seen it. I seen it an’ I’m gonna be me right in with you an’ Lennie.”” (Chapter 3, Page 60)

This is Candy's impassioned declaration of his desire to join their dream. He offers his savings, a significant contribution, driven by the hope of escaping his bleak future and finding a place of belonging and purpose.

Crooks: The Weight of Prejudice and Loneliness

Crooks, the only black stable hand, is ostracized and subjected to the cruel realities of racial prejudice. His isolation and bitterness are palpable, yet he too clings to the hope of a better life.

1. "“You got no right to come in my room. This is my room. Go on. Git out.”" (Chapter 4, Page 68)

This powerful statement, delivered by Crooks to Lennie, immediately establishes his defensive posture and the deep-seated resentment born from years of segregation and mistreatment. His room is his only sanctuary, and he guards it fiercely.

1. "“Nobody can tell what a guy’s gonna do from one minute to the next.”" (Chapter 4, Page 71)

Crooks speaks these words with a weary cynicism, reflecting his understanding of the capricious nature of life and the unpredictable cruelty of men. He has witnessed too much hardship to harbor naive optimism.

1. "'If you guys would come and bring some of them rabbits. I'd be right in here with you.'" (Chapter 4, Page 72)

This surprising offer from Crooks, a flicker of hope in his otherwise bleak existence, shows the universal appeal of belonging and the dream of a better life. It underscores how the "American Dream" was, for many marginalized individuals, a desperately sought-after escape from oppression.

Curley's Wife: A Symbol of Unfulfilled Potential and Isolation

Curley's wife, often perceived as a temptress or a nag, is a tragically underdeveloped character whose words reveal a deep-seated loneliness and a yearning for attention and a life beyond her current circumstances.

1. "'Why can't I talk to you? I never get to talk to nobody. I get awful lonely.'" (Chapter 4, Page 86)

This poignant confession to Lennie humanizes her, revealing her own isolation and her desperate need for connection. She is trapped by societal expectations and her marriage, yearning for a life she was promised but never received.

1. "'I mighta knowed about you, little guy. You like little guys when they taken' out the rabbits.'" (Chapter 5, Page 88)

This statement, spoken just before her death, is a chilling premonition. Her awareness of Lennie's fascination with soft things, coupled with her own desire for him to play with her hair, creates a tragically ironic and fatal situation.

1. "'You're so pretty when you're small. You gotta talk to me, Lennie.'" (Chapter 5, Page 87)

This unsettling request highlights her manipulative but ultimately desperate attempts to engage Lennie, revealing a disturbing naivete about his capabilities and her own vulnerability.

Slim: The Voice of Reason and Empathy

Slim, the respected and insightful ranch hand, serves as a moral compass and a voice of quiet wisdom throughout the novella. His understanding of human nature and his empathy for George and Lennie make him a pivotal figure.

1. "'You hadda George. I swear you hadda.'" (Chapter 6, Page 104)

This is Slim's ultimate validation of George's decision. In the face of Lennie's unintentional destruction and the inevitable consequences, Slim understands that George made the only humane choice possible, sparing Lennie further suffering and himself the agony of Lennie facing a brutal end.

1. "'A guy goes nuts if he ain't got nobody. That's the swear, man. That's the way it is.'" (Chapter 3, Page 70)

Slim's profound observation speaks to the pervasive theme of loneliness in the novella. He recognizes the vital importance of companionship and the psychological toll that isolation can take on a person, particularly in their itinerant existence.

1. "'Never you mind. A hot bath and then work. You'll feel better.'" (Chapter 3, Page 47)

This simple piece of advice from Slim to George after Lennie's violent outburst demonstrates his practical nature and his ability to offer solace without judgment. He understands the need for immediate comfort and a return to routine to restore equilibrium.

1	What is the most famous quote from 'Of Mice and Men' and where can I find it?	The most iconic quote is likely, 'The best laid schemes o' Mice an' Men / Gang aft agley,' from Robert Burns' poem, which inspires the title. In the novel, it's alluded to by George and Candy when discussing their dream farm, particularly after Lennie's actions lead to its demise. While not directly quoted with page numbers in the text, the sentiment resonates throughout the book, especially near the end of Chapter 5 and into Chapter 6.
2	What does George mean when he tells Lennie, 'Guys like us, that work on ranches, are the loneliest guys in the world' (Chapter 1)?	In Chapter 1, George is explaining to Lennie the transient and isolated nature of ranch life. He highlights how workers drift from place to place, never forming lasting bonds, making them inherently lonely without companionship.
3	Can you give me a powerful quote about dreams and hope, and its significance?	A significant quote is George's description of their dream farm: 'We coulda ate anythin' we wanted to eat. ... And we could have our own rabbits...' (Chapter 3). This quote embodies the American Dream and the hope for security and freedom that sustains George and Lennie through their hardship.

4	What does Slim say about companionship that's memorable?	Slim observes, 'A guy gets to thinkin', an' he gets pretty lonely.' (Chapter 3). This simple statement underscores the deep need for connection and understanding, particularly relevant to the characters in the novel who crave belonging.
5	What's a quote that highlights the theme of powerlessness?	Curley's wife's line, 'Any place I want,' said with a bitter frustration (referring to where she could go if she were a movie star, Chapter 4), reveals her own trapped circumstances and lack of agency. It speaks to the limited options available to women and marginalized individuals on the ranch.
6	What does the quote 'An' live off the fatta the lan'!' reveal about George and Lennie's ambition?	This quote, a recurring mantra for Lennie (e.g., Chapter 1), encapsulates their shared dream of self-sufficiency and independence. It represents a desire to escape the drudgery of ranch work and live a life of their own making, controlling their own destiny.

7	What does Candy's regretful quote about his dog reveal about the novel's message?	Candy says, 'You ain't no good to this world no more.' (Chapter 3), referring to his old dog. This foreshadows Lennie's fate and highlights the theme of disposability and the harsh realities of a world that values strength and usefulness above all else.
8	What's a quote that shows the contrast between George's pragmatism and Lennie's innocence?	George often reminds Lennie, 'Don't you even think about it, Lennie. Just bein' here is enough.' (Chapter 1). This shows George's focus on survival and managing Lennie's childlike desires, contrasting with Lennie's simple, immediate wants.
9	What does Carlson's repeated phrase, 'What the hell you want?' (e.g., Chapter 3), tell us about his character?	Carlson's brusque and often dismissive question reveals his lack of empathy and his pragmatic, unsentimental view of the world. He represents a common attitude on the ranch, unconcerned with the emotional needs of others.

10	What is the significance of George's final words to Lennie, 'You ain't gonna be lonely... no, the hell you ain't' (Chapter 6)?	In the poignant conclusion of Chapter 6, George's altered repetition of the earlier loneliness theme is devastating. He is trying to give Lennie a final, comforting illusion of their shared dream, even as he knows it's impossible, showcasing the tragic arc of their relationship and the failure of their hopes.
